1	faculty prioritization process seems data-driven but is actually very subjective	4/4/2019 6:11 PM
2	We can improve the information we receive by having a more standardized format for each area to complete.	4/3/2019 3:07 PM
3	What is "relevant" needs to be defined, no? Data, and ample data was provided, but the criteria or lens with which to rank it and through which one needed to evaluate it was not agreed upon. So for one department chair it might have been more important the ratio of FTEs/FTEF, to another the number of students served. To another the number of students wait listed; and yet to others the difficulty to find part-time instructors.	2/25/2019 10:46 PM

1	Again, some would disagree, since it was open but not for all. Some faculty, other than department chairs were permitted to come to the meeting to petition for more faculty. Others were not provided the same opportunity because they did not know this was possible to do. So what is the saying, the squeaky wheel gets the grease?	2/25/2019 10:46 PM

1	I found that many of the positions received 100 so it left me again to a subjective ranking. I believe we should include the faculty positions.	4/15/2019 8:41 AM
2	not all disciplines have the same criteria for priority hiring	4/4/2019 6:11 PM
3	We need to update the rubric so that the selection process is less subjective.	4/3/2019 3:07 PM
4	What rubric?	2/25/2019 10:46 PM
5	The rubric system essentially weights all data points equally. What about small disciplines that need to grow? Do we just keep making large disciplines larger? How does that jive with our Strategic plan and our goal to be more a more comprehensive college?	2/25/2019 10:53 AM
6	We didn't get very much data to actually use or rely on to help us prioritize. It was more about who could present a good argument.	2/24/2019 2:45 PM
